Ecological virtues
ecological solidarity

- Jesus lived with the poorest people in his region. He helped them and also spoke to their hearts. They listened to him with great interest because his message brought them happiness. For example, he told them: "Blessed (happy) you poor! God is with you!"
- Jesus taught that money is not the most important thing to live, that's why he lamented the rich who had their hearts attached to money and power.
- In our society, the rich and those who are applauded by everyone are considered happy. Jesus calls happy those who are empty of themselves and trust in God.
- The simplicity of life gives us happiness, allows us to share, and be in solidarity with those who have less; on the contrary, consumerism takes away our peace and makes us selfish.
- Rich is the one who has more love to give, if you love your classmates and show solidarity with others, you are rich.
- Let's think about the wealth we have: rivers, seas, forests, air-oxygen, energy sources, food, etc. "Should we waste them, save them? Do we behave like "rich" unsupportive? Today the words of Jesus could sound like this: "Woe to the rich... in water, energy, electricity, heat...!"
- We are going to commit ourselves as a family to living ecological solidarity.
